

Ecclesiastes

Recall a birthday party you've recently attended. There was likely a moment when the cake was brought out, candles lit, and the gathered crowd stood around to celebrate and sing as the candles were blown out. For just a moment you could see the vapor trail of smoke rising from the wicks and then, in a breath, it was gone.

This is the portrait of life presented in the book of Ecclesiastes, the smoke from a just-extinguished birthday candle. Here and gone. The Preacher, our guide throughout the book, confronts the inexorable approach of death and the implications this has on our search for meaning in life. In that pursuit, questions begin to rise to the surface. If I'm going to die just like everyone else, where do I find meaning? How can I live with hope and joy in the here and now? What really matters, and how does God fit into all of this? In Ecclesiastes, we are invited to hear the reflections of a wise king (the Preacher) who has come before, who has sought answers to these (and other) questions of meaning and purpose, and found lacking the answers, achievements, and acclaim that he found.

Ecclesiastes compellingly offers a raw and honest account of life "under the sun." What does that mean, you might ask? It might be represented well by the dash between the date of birth and date of death on a headstone. It is the toil that defines our days, the rhythm that marks out the boundaries of seasons and years. Life "under the sun" is shaped, all too often, by the human tendency to look for ultimate purpose in people, places, pursuits, and things that cannot bear the weight of our search. That recognition leads the speaker in Ecclesiastes to say, all is vanity.

But is it? Is life without eternal substance? Is everything meaningless? Of course not. Nothing in this life can provide ultimate satisfaction, but our relationship with the Sovereign Lord imbues everything with eternal weight and purpose, so long as life is lived for Him (12:13-14).

Ecclesiastes is meant to serve as a catalyst for reflection, for honest self-evaluation, and for sober recognition of the ways in which we look for meaning apart from the Lord, especially as we are confronted by the fact that we will, one day, die. While that is a difficult reality, it is necessary. Honest confrontation with the reality of death, and its implications for finding meaning in life, sits at the very heart of the words of Ecclesiastes' Preacher. As David Gibson puts it, "Far from being something that makes life in the present completely pointless, future death is a light God shines on the present to change it. Death can radically enable us to enjoy life. By relativizing all that we do in our days under the sun, death can change us from people who want to control life for gain into people who find deep joy in receiving life as a gift. This is the main message of Ecclesiastes in a nutshell: life in God's world is gift, not gain."

Discussion Questions

- 1) What observations stand out in Ecclesiastes 7-8?
- 2) Iain Provan said, about Ecclesiastes 7-8, "Death is an evangelist. It helps us to see that there is a great gulf fixed between Creator and creature and places us in a position therefore truly to worship and to repent of our sins... Death allows the embrace of serious living before God, which has at its heart 'the fear of the Lord'." What lessons might we learn from death as described in these chapters?
- 3) The Preacher has spoken of the benefits of wisdom yet here he also speaks of its limitations (i.e. 7:23-24). Why might it be important for us to recognize that there are inherent limits to our wisdom?
- 4) In what ways are the sources of your greatest anxiety and pain related to your desire for control in life and the realization that your control/power is limited? How might the Lord, in these chapters, be speaking to those things in your life?
- 5) Read Ecclesiastes 8:14-17. How might a consideration of death and human limitations provide a pathway to joy in life?
- 6) If you were to write your own eulogy, what would you want it to say about you and your life? What might need to change in your life now in order for that eulogy to prove true?
